THURSDAY MORNING, APRIL 15, 1858. HOW WOMEN HAVE THE BEST OF

EVERYTHING. A bachelor gentleman, of New York, ircensed at the talk concerning the "rights" that women have not, and the persecution that they endure, pours out his vexation at great length in the Home Journal. Hear

"Don't talk to me about the best of everyrything! The ladies have all the pick and the choice. Then, again, at all public places of amusement, witness the fatigue the gentlemen often encounter. Just observe a party of ladies and gentlemen going into a box at a theatre-the ladies all jump into the best seats, without being invited; the gentlemen timidly stand back, and are pushed into a corper, where they can see nothing, except by standing up, and leaning over, at the expense of a crooked neck the next morning, or a weariness of limbs which a night's rest is not sufficient to remove, whilst the ladies sleep in the lap of forgetfulness, and at breakfast are as fresh as a pack of hounds on a summer morning. No, sir! Many a weary night of it I have had, in standing and waiting for the oppressed sex, as you call it. I have also wished I were a woman myself, except that I would disdain to accept such services from the other sex as they do. And yet they would tax us for the support of their impracticables! would they?

"Woman's work never done! say you?but what sort of work? They are chatting all the time of it. Don't they sit at the windone in the street! Of course I mean those who do not ride out. Don't they knowevery body that rings for admittance? And did not our servant discover how many clean shirts the gentleman opposite used in a week, and how often he changed his stockings, and whether he wore drawers in summer or not, and all that by merely watching the laundress' bundle at the door?

"Making and mending clothes for children! Nonsense! They are amusing themselves with the children all the while, and they like it, and long for a drive in a carriage now and then, for a change, but not for other and more agreeable work, not they; for they not only like the work, but they have even the dress-makers to come and sit beside them, that they may be always at hand to superintend and direct. Toil! The most of them are weary just sitting doing nothing .-What would they do if they had their will? Even those who have carriages at their command, at last think it a trouble to take an hour's drive and shopping; and so toilsome (as you call it) does it become, at last, that they cannot even stand in a dry goods store, but must have the silks, satins and laces all brought to them, as they seat themselves before the counter.

"Food and clothing! I believe women in general are all better clad than men. How often will you see a tidy, even lady-looking wife, walking with an operative husband, poorly clad; and a handsome, well-dressed girl, with a brother out at at the elbows; and how often does a wife say to her husband, "you're a shame to be seen!" And how expensive lady's dresses are, and their bonnets! Why a girl's duck of a bonnet costs two men's hats; and then the rings and the bracelets, the gold chains that they wear! Every woman carries more value upon her than any man of her rank. A watch is a man's only luxury, and that is often expensive; but then he carries that for use; a woman's watch is only for show, as are earrings, bracelets and necklaces. No, sir! the wealth more than their share. And what have men, instead? A piece of broadcloth so sparingly used, that while it takes twenty yards to make a dress for a woman, about three and a half are more than enough for a respectable sized man. It is always economy in dressing a man, but extrargance in dressing a wea man, but extravagance in dressing a woman. And as for food, they get as much as tightly that they dare not eat much. They would if they durst. And then they have all the choice things, while we are expected to be contented with their leavings. But don't tell me, sir, about women being treated worse than men."

VANITY REBUKED.

Poor Tom Coryat went twisting and whirling round the world like a top whipped by Vanity and Poverty; and, excepting the impulse, as insensible as a top to the whipping -which be must oftentimes have well deserved. On one occasion, hearing from the mosque the Moolah's usual cry, "There is no God but God, and Mahomet is his prophet," he ascended a high building, and began shouting in the same tongue, that Mahomet by the Maryland Drawings, are frauds. was an imposter. The leniency shown to lunatics saved bim from the punishment due to his impertinence. His vanity was once sorely mortified; for, being told that King James had inquired about him, he eagerly asked of fair and honest drawings what his Majesty had said. He was answered that, "after hearing that Tom was well, all that the monarch said was, 'Is that fool yet living? -Blackwood's Magazine.
